Inside a Burrow

All the adults in a family help build the burrow. Sharp prairie dog claws dig out several entrances. Below some, they make listening rooms. Then, they keep digging to make a long tunnel. The prairie dogs make a bedroom, where the family sleeps, and nesting rooms for when females are ready to have babies.

Prairie dogs make mounds of dirt around each entrance. This keeps rainwater out.

Life in the Den

For the first few weeks, the mother stays in the den. She feeds the cubs milk from her body and licks them to keep them clean. Once they are a little older, the mother takes short trips out of the den. The babies stay behind while she finds food.

A litter of foxes usually has five cubs. But it can include as many as 14!

CHAPTER 3
The Secret Room

The next morning, while his parents were busy unpacking, Zach opened the door to the basement and began to climb down the stairs.

"Wait for me, Zach," called Sophie from the top of the stairs.

Zach was relieved to have his sister's company. They walked to the armoire. Zach directed the flashlight's beam onto the floor. Zach and Sophie gasped. Just as on the previous day, a puddle of dark red blood seeped from under it.

"Where's the blood coming from?" asked Zach.

Together, Zach and Sophie pushed hard on one side of the armoire. With an ear-piercing shriek, it slid sideways.

Behind the armoire was a metal door with a lever-like handle.

"It's a secret room," whispered Sophie, nervously.

Zach reached for the handle and pushed it down. The heavy door swung open.

A strange buzzing noise filled the air. Then two bulbs hanging from the room's ceiling flickered on.

Jane maneuvered her wheelchair between two sets of shelves and reached for a book about wildflowers from 1903. Its crumbling cover was made of pale blue leather. Inside the book, was a faded inscription:

As Jane carefully turned the fragile pages, she suddenly got the feeling that someone was watching her. She twisted her head to look around, but the aisle was empty.

Jane placed the wildflower book back on the shelf. Then, from the next aisle, she heard the sound of someone turning the pages of a book. She moved to the end of the aisle and peered into the shadows. The library's dim lighting made it difficult to see.

"Hello!" she said. But the only sound Jane heard was the creaking of the wooden floorboards under her wheels as she moved slowly down the aisle.

Suddenly, the air around Jane turned icy cold. It was so cold, she felt as if she'd climbed into a refrigerator. Did someone just turn on the air conditioner at full blast? she thought.

Shivering, Jane looked at the shelves to her left and right. The feeling of being watched was now even more powerful. The hairs on the back of her neck rose. Then, out of nowhere . . .

Whoosh . . . Thud!

A book flew off one of the shelves and fell on the floor directly in front of her.
